

I would like the FCC to leave in place the states' laws regarding blocking telephone solicitations. Since we have been on Indiana's plan we have gotten our evenings back without the annoying and oftentimes incessant sequence of calls from groups asking for money or companies asking for our business, and especially telephone companies trying to get us to change our long-distance carrier. Indiana's law is working just fine. If the FCC gets into the game, they will have to consider what is right for the entire country. And what is right for other states is not right for Indiana just as what is right for Indiana is not right for all the states.
